Module-1: Introduction to Disability Studies

Module -2: Foundation of Disability Studies

Module-3: Disability as Human Diversity

Module-4: Disability and Social Policy

Departing from the established assumptions that disability is a mere deficit and a constricted corporal condition, this course addresses the phenomenon as a domain of knowledge, a 'lived experience' as much as a framework for interrogation.

Thus, the certificate course consists of four modules to be completed by the candidate in prescribed credit hour. The introductory module includes various approaches and concepts of disability. The Second module entitled Foundation and its relation with other similar issues connected to Disability Studies. Module Three will describe the „Disability and diverse need of persons with disabilities“. Apart from other concerns, this module would help students interact and learn from domain experts across geographies. The last module would be on policy, health care, employment, and integration. These four modules will have the following course content.
