

UBIQUITOUS, the English Literary Society

The Society was named as Ubiquitous as it means something which is present everywhere. It is an umbrella under which all literary activities take place outside classrooms . It provides a platform for the literati's to be recognised and have a standing outside the academic realm.

The Society was formed with two different objectives initially, first it being a morale booster to the obscure throng of literature and second to let the students have an interactive juncture both on inter and intra college levels. It has benefitted students in unreckonable ways, may that be the development of one's own perspective towards society and literature or encouragement to read and treat literature as an essential requisite to oneself.

Ubiquitous aims at providing a definite platform to literature and language enthusiasts to express and develop their ideas in various oratory and writing competitions. It endeavours constantly to expose students to expert speakers and new researchers by organising seminars and conferences.
